Freedom has given us a new status and new opportunities. But it also implies that we should give up selfishness, laziness and narrowness of our work. We should discipline ourselves, and discharge our duties. We should put our full capacity in productive efforts. We should remember that work is health and service is happiness. The greatest crime today is idleness. If we root out idleness, all our difficulties will disappear. We must make a contribution to the welfare of the country. There can be no progress without hard work. It is essential for marching ahead in the world of today.
